Styling hair for good cause

Hair stylist and make-up artist Amanda Pepin of Bristol organized a fundraiser, 'Cut Cancer' to help raise money to fight breast cancer. As part of the event, which was held at Parisian Salon and Day Spa, there were a lot of drastic hair styles being created. Pepin said she organized the fund raiser because a client of hers is going through breast cancer now. Amanda wanted to do what she can to help out. Amanda even capped off the by joining in the drastic hair changes. Here, she is transformed as well with a new radical hair style. To donate, go to www.stay-classy.org/member/fundraising?fcid=114793

How real women work hot trend

Stretch pants are a hot trend. If you're a real woman, however, you might approach that trend with some trepidation. To help you work the trend, Women With Control offers up a line of casual basics including leggings, pants, capris, tank and dresses comprised of 86% cotton and 14% spandex offering you control and lift your shape to help you look your absolute best. Additionally, all styles feature a no-roll thick waist band to minimize your tummy and give you a smooth line where your pants meet your shirt. Women With Control is priced below $60 and sizes run from XXS-XXXL to fit real women. Kate Ottavio models some selections from Women With Control. Shoes provided by OKA b.
